

20th Century European Urbanism – urbanHIST's Objectives

Throughout the 20th century, urban planning constituted itself as an important tool to spatially direct social developments.

Contemporary historiographic approach to urbanism. Most studies on 20th century urban planning adopt a national perspective, while studies aiming to provide an overview focus on several core countries with special attention to the generation of planning innovations in the advanced capitalist countries. The mainstream planning historiography mostly ignores not only a majority of European countries, but also important aspects of the history of urbanism like the function of urban planning as an instrument of nation-building, as a resource of power for dictatorships or as vehicle to homogenise the development of bigger areas of the continent. Furthermore, methodological approaches are very heterogeneous. urbanHIST follows an approach which responds to this criticism.

urbanHIST- more than just a PhD-programme!

urbanHist is a multidisciplinary research and training programme run by four universities in Germany, Spain, Slovakia and Sweden in cooperation with 13 partner-organizations and funded within the European Union's Horizon 2020 research and innovation programme in the Marie Skłodowska-Curie Action - Innovative Training Networks (ITN) as European Joint Doctorate (EJD) aims to develop and sustainably promote a joint understanding of 20th century urbanism in Europe. 15 Early Stage Researchers will be researching in 8 thematic fields, embedded into a network of high-profile academics and practitioners.

urbanHIST - a European Joint Doctorate

The 15 Early Stage Researchers will be researching in a multidisciplinary environment between architecture and politics, history, urbanism, and economics under the joint supervision of two of the four universities.

urbanHIST offers

- an up to three years lasting fulltime employment contract with the hosting university
- secondments to the partner institutions in the academic and non-academic sector
- colloquia
- international conferences
- trainings in seven qualification tracks, partially with external trainers

Having successfully completed their research, Early Stage Researchers will be awarded a double degree.

urbanHIST- eight research fields

The work of the Early Stage Researchers is organised in eight thematic fields which are led by one of the four universities each. These are:

Bauhaus-Universität Weimar:

- (1) Historiography of European urbanism
- (2) Urbanism, political and development strategies

Universidad de Valladolid:

- (3) Public infrastructure, social housing and evolution of European cities
- (4) Urbanism, heritage and urban planning in Europe

Univerzita Pavla Jozefa Šafárika v Košiciach:
